NEW YEAR'S GIFT

Of One Hundred Thousand Dollars For Detective Parr.

Washington, Dec. 28.—Richard Parr, the customs detective who discovered the steel springs in the scales of the American Sugar Refining company on the dock at Williamsburg and furnished most of the evidence through which more than $3,000,000 has been returned to the federal treasury, will get his reward as a New Year's greeting, $100,000, for his work. He was paid $20,000 some time ago, but the treasury has no more funds to complete the payment. The urgent deficiency bill passed by congress carried an item of $90,000 and of that $80,000 will go to Parr. Secretary MacVeagh will sign a warrant this week transferring the money to Collector Loeb of New York, who will pay Parr before New Year's Day.

Metropolitan Museum of Art at Last Headed by an American

When Sir Casper Purdon Clarke resigned as director of the Metropolitan Museum of Art J. Pierpont Morgan and the other directors hurried to Europe to find another director. They spent many weeks going over the list of candidates, but failed to find the proper man. Discouraged, they returned to the United States and found the very man they were seeking. Dr. Edward Robinson has been selected for the post, and he is a native of Boston. He was born in 1858 and is a graduate of Harvard. He spent many years in Paris and Greece studying art and was decorated by the German emperor. Dr. Robinson expects to enlarge the museum, and, while it is now the most famous in the United States, he plans to make it the most famous in the world.

HIS CHRISTMAS PRESENT

By MARK WHITEMORE

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

Henry Trayne and his wife, Laura, had been married ten years and had not been blessed with children. Henry was thirty-eight, and Laura was thirty-two. They had reached the age where childless married people begin to try to supply the deficiency by pets.

Henry Trayne, who was a professional chemist and mining engineer, was offered every inducement to go to the Pacific coast and direct the operations of a mine. Besides his salary, he was offered some stock of the company. For a long time he declined, not caring to break up his home on an uncertainty—for the mine might prove worthless—or to leave his wife while the experiment was being made, but "the wolf" was prowling about the door, and at last the couple made up their minds to bear the separation.

Henry was obliged to make a preliminary trip to a distant city where the capitalists who were to employ him lived in order to talk matters over and become posted as to his work. During this absence, which lasted a month, Laura had a taste of what she was to endure during the longer separation. When her husband returned the couple were enraptured at the reunion, being like a young couple in their honeymoon, except that the longer separation stared them in the face.

When the March winds were blowing Henry bade his wife a sorrowful adieu and went to the field of his operations. During the first month of absence Laura wrote him every day "Chimney" (the dog), "dear boy, misses you very much. The day you left he whined and fretted and ran about pining for his dear papa. Toddlie" (the parrot) "said yesterday, 'Oh, Henry, how can I live without you?' I wonder if the dear girl got that from me."

Had the letters fallen into the hands of strangers they would have supposed the writer to be referring to beloved children. However, after a few weeks—possibly Laura was becoming more accustomed to her husband's absence and did not need to lavish so much love on Chimney and Toddlie—the letters assumed a more practical tone. Laura hoped the venture would be successful. They were getting on toward old age and nothing laid up it would be nice if in addition to Henry's salary the shares that had been given him would become valuable. Then they would not have to worry about the future. In one of her letters she asked Henry if there were good schools in the district where the mines were located. Henry wrote back that he hadn't taken any interest in the schools, for if they made the place a permanent home, not having any children of their own, it wouldn't make any difference. To which Laura replied that she thought Toddlie could be taught to read, and she wouldn't like to take her where such a thing would be impossible if desired. Henry, who had got used to being separated from his pets, thought this absurd.

Six months passed, and no immediate prospect of Henry's getting home. October came, and there was a rich strike in the mine. The success of the enterprise was secured, but still Henry could not get away. In December he left everything to go home and spend Christmas with his wife and Chimney and Toddlie.

He arrived on Christmas morning. As he ran up the steps of his house he noticed an auto standing before the door and in the hall met the family physician, who was giving some instructions to a trained nurse. Henry, in terror, begged to be informed as to the reason for their being there.

"The crisis is passed," said the doctor. "Don't worry. Nurse, go up and prepare Mrs. Trayne to meet her husband. We don't want to startle her."

The nurse went upstairs and in a few minutes called out that Mr. Trayne might come up. Henry was so anxious that he had not responded to Chimney's greetings and when the dog got in his way as he was hurrying upstairs gave him a push that sent him away yelping. When the eager husband reached his wife's door he was astonished to see a placard on it bearing the words:

"Merry Christmas from Harry."

Too anxious to give way to wonder as to what it meant, he opened the door softly and entered the room. There lay Laura, with the tiniest bit of a baby on her arm, and the mother had a happy smile of welcome on her face.

"A Christmas present for you, Henry," said Laura.

The nurse, who took a position to see the husband's face at the moment of his surprise, told the doctor that "he looked as if he had had a pitcher of joy poured over him." He stood for a moment enraptured at what he saw, then took his wife and their child in one embrace. "Now I know," he said, "why you were inquiring about the schools and were giving me that nonsense about teaching Toddlie to read. But why didn't you let me know?" "I wanted to surprise you. And when I learned that you were to come at this time I hoped my Christmas gift would be here ready for you. The doctor delivered it without wrapper or address this morning at 6 o'clock."

And so it was that Chimney and Toddlie were relegated to a very inferior position to make way for the rising son of the household. Toddlie, who was bright enough to deserve a better fate, says:

"Shut up! You'll wake the baby!"
